WOMAN WRITER GETS IDEAS FROM ORIENTALS

English Novelist Says She Looks to Asia for Heroes and Heroines.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

PARIS. — Oriental thought has solved many problems with which the Western world has wrestled in vain, believes E. Barrington, English novelist. She is resting in Paris, which provided the background for her latest novel, "The Thunderer," based on the life of Napoleon.

"I was much in touch with the Oriental side of things, besides which the interest of the governing races pales," she said.

"For contemporary heroes and heroines of romance I should go to Asia," she says.

In real life the author is Mrs. L. Adams Beck. Her home is in Victoria, British Columbia, where she will live after a trip to Ceylon.

Pressure Chips Flint.

It has been discovered by the Bureau of American Ethnology that the Indians found the secret of chipping flint into arrowheads by applying pressure and not by striking a blow. A piece of bone was held against the flint and when accompanied by a quick movement flaked off a piece of the flint where a blow would have failed to do so.
